INVESTITURE BY GLOVE. With white, French gray, laveniar, and even to wear when they were young dandies, and some who are very old-fashioned will persist in rearing still, it seems difficult to believe that there ever was a time when gloves were a great-luxury, still more difficult to fancy a time need not go very far back to come upon that time of luxury. Roger de Beauvoir, in his certain performance that was very much in rogue in the days of Queen Elizabeth, mentions how Edward de Vere, Marquis of Oxford, who had traveled through Europe and resided some time in Italy, brought home to his royal mistress a pair of perfumed gloves, ornamented with four resettes of colored silk. The gloves were the deligh t and the envy of The gloves were the delight and the cury of the court, and the Queen herself was so graff-fied that she had a portrait taken, in which she appeared with both hands gloved. The perfume with which these gloves were scented, was long known in the English court as the "Marquisef Oxford perfume." As to gloves as necessaries, history takes us further back into times very remote, indeed—when we appre-hend the lives and exploits of men, but cannot figure to ourselves their habits and customs. hend the lives and exploits of men, but cannot figure to ourselves their habits and customs. Thus, Xenophon, inveighing against the effec-inacy of the Persians, tells us that they put a thick covering over their feet, and not that only, but protected their hands with some kind of overall, which can have been nothing wind of overall, which can have been souring but a pair of gloves.

When Dr. Riccabocca was found in the partials stocks by the squire, in answer to the question put to him by his astonished friend, how did he get there, he replied that Plins the edge got into the erater of Mount Vessivias. Now, of this most memorable journey of the philosopher, his nephew has just left us a most interesting account, and among the details of philosopher, his nephew has just left us a most-interesting account, and among the details of that history is one to the effect that his uncla-was accompanied on this occasion by a secre-tary, who was to write at the distation of the sage whatever matters of interest should have occurred in this memorable tour, and the sec-retary had gloves on his hands so as to long-up the necessary warmsh when they got into up the necessary warmsh when they got mot those snowy regions.

Then glores, too, had their part in matters of ceremony and investiture, of which but ose relic has remained to modern times. In old days, when writing was little used, formalities were more common; thus, one of the most usual ways of conveying land was by what was called feoffeunt with ilberty of sciein, and was called feoffeunt with ilberty of solain, and was performed "by doltvery of the ring or haspe of the doore, or by a twigge of a tree, or a turfe of land." The parties met, and holding between them the deed of conveyance and the ring of the door, haspe, twigge, or turfe, as the case might be, the weader solemnly delivered over the possession of these parts of his property in the name of it all; then the purchaser, if it were a house, entored it alone, abut the door after him, and afterward opened it to his friends.

At the time when these formalities were needful to the effective conveyance of land.

At the time when these formations were neciful to the effective conveyance of land-then the only real property—giving possession by the delivery of gloves prevailed as a custom in other countries. Thus, in the eleventh cen-tury, the Bishops of Paderborn and Monerco-gained the actual tenure of their sees by ac-cepting a pair of gloves. Gloves at that time were essentially an eniscopal emblers, as the gained the actual tenure of their sees by accepting a pair of gloves. Gloves at that time were essentially an episcopal emblem, as the mitre continues to be; and so much importance was attached to the matter of dress that when some of the French abbots took upon them to adopt gloves the Council of Poictiers took the affair in hand, and positively forbade their mesby the inferior dignitaries of the Church, and gave the reasons of their decree. Gloves, they said, were, like andals and rings, special emblems of the episcopal degree poculiar to bishops, who wore them, not as mere coverings, but adorned with jewels as part of the dress and hadge of their high spirman office. And for the same reason, when the old Kings of France were crowned, part of the ceremony of the coronation consisted in the bissaing of the gloves, and for a long time investiture by glove remained a practice in Eastern countries. There is a memorable scrap of oriental history to support the evidence of the existence of this custom. When King Consadm lost his crown through the successful usurpation of Mainfroy, and the unfortunate king had to mount the scaffold, he addressed the crown giving an proof of his investiture a glove which he held in his hand, and then fining down among the crowd, charging whoever should pick it up that he would conveyt to so on the autriving crowd, charging whoever should pick it up that he would conveyit to some one of his surviving relations, who would reward the service and avenge the usucpation. The glove was picked up by some knight, who took it to Peter o Arrages, and that king was crowned at Pa lermo in virtue of the investiture of this glove

WHO WROTE SHAKSPEARD Hamlet overheard Julius Cassar tell King Lear, on the Twelfth Night after the Tempest, that Anthony and Cleopatra had told Corio lanus that Two Gentlemen of Verona were the authors of Shakapeare's plays. Leur said: You may take it As You Like It, but I don't believe it, for I heard Romeo and Juliet say Love's Labor was Lost when Trollus and Crosida stole the Comedy of Errers and sold it to the Merchant of Venice for forty bottles of old Bourbon and a package of poker checks. Timon of Athens and Cymbeline were parties to the theft, and after drinking Measure for Measure with the Merry Wives of Windsor, told settles it; so, why make so Much Ado About Nothing! Othello was busy dealing a five-cent game of faro to the IV., V. and VI. Henrye, and the only remark made by them was an the Shrew, I could get no further evidence as to who wrote Shakspeare. But All's Wellthat Ends well. Don't iti-Richmond Enquire.
